Course Description

This course is designed for Advanced High students and is taught in Chinese (with only occasional facilitation in English). The course is designed to introduce the important role China plays in a global context and to help students understand Chinese perspectives on global issues that affect the world today.

Learning Objectives

1. Understand the Chinese views of global problems.
2. Understand the important role of China in global issues.
3. Gain language abilities in reading for content, writing an academic paper, and discussing in depth academic and cultural topics.

Course Prerequisites

At least two semesters of college-level Chinese language study, or heritage learners with consent of the instructor.

Methods of Instruction

In each week, the first class is usually used for lectures and the second is used for discussion, movie, class debate or exchange with ECNU students. The Instructor will keep in touch with students through email. Field studies will be integrated in the instruction, including several site visits. Students will see one or two films related with this course at class. The ACS program will provide support in the form of study workshops where ECNU graduate tutors help students read materials, write papers, and discuss content.

Assessment and Final Grade

Attendance and Participation:	20%
Participation and Discussion:	30%
Written Reports:	20% (10% each)
Final Oral Presentation:	30%

Written reports and research papers overdue without valid reason will have points deducted from the assignment grade.

All coursework must be submitted directly to the instructor of record and you should keep hard copies of all assignments (every major paper or take home examination) for up to one year after the completion of the program, in addition to digital copies, to make sure credit is accurately transferred to your home university.

Course Requirements

Written Reports

There will be 2 short written reports in the semester, which are usually summaries of what a student has read, watched, or interviewed, and should include the student's own comments. Each report should be no less than 800 characters.

Attendance and Class Participation

Attendance is extremely important and will have a significant impact on the final grade. Participation in classroom discussion will also be calculated separately into the final grade, so it is very important to prepare before class, and read the assigned texts to be able to join class discussion. Each hour of unexcused absence will result the deduction of 0.4 points, from attendance and participation categories. Each excused absence will result in the deduction of 0.2 points from the participation grade category.

Final Oral Presentation

Students need to choose a topic related with this course, prepare PPT and .have half hour presentation.
